Yes, I think she is exactly the person who can help us use this new info creatively.

See what I just wrote as a possible response from Lisa and please check if my characterization of Kimba Wood's summary judgment against Gorton's for copyright violation is described correctly (the link to that story is in the email, but there is probably a lot else on the web—this was 3 weeks ago). You're the attorney (or soon to be). You may want to check the Wikipedia posting (not up-to-date) on Gorton. He's clearly an arrogant guy who thinks he's smarter than other people. I love the "Bernie Madoff of Internet crime" quote.

Also, I think this is the leverage we were seeking. If true, and DOT has been in bed in TA even behind the scenes, they would be idiots to continue to work with them if TA's bag man and Streetsblog's director is getting in such trouble. $1b in damages is a big number. He's behind both TA and Streetsblog, and they are nailing US for being Marty's rich friends? Maybe time to call Michael Grynbaum. This is much more interesting than that Sadik-Khan taking a limo all the time.

And Ben Freid's blog posting which compares numbers is an easy entrée to ask how they got this many people so quickly... Sweet!
